

VertexCore Technologies — Business Travel Policy

Sample fictional policy document for a company-document RAG chatbot project. This document is for software-development practice only and is not a real company policy.

1. Travel Approval

Business travel must be approved by the employee's manager before reservations are made. International travel may require additional approval from the department leader.

Employees should use the company's approved travel booking process whenever available.

2. Air Travel

Domestic flights should normally be booked in economy class. International flights may be booked in premium economy for trips longer than eight hours with manager approval.

Employees should select reasonably priced, practical itineraries rather than premium options when comparable alternatives are available.

3. Hotels

Employees should select safe business-class hotels near the work location. The standard reimbursement limit is $250 per night before taxes and fees.

Higher-cost accommodations require advance manager approval when a suitable option within the limit is unavailable.

4. Meals

Employees may be reimbursed for reasonable business-travel meals up to $60 per day. Alcoholic beverages are not reimbursable.

Receipts should be retained and submitted with the expense report.

5. Ground Transportation

Reasonable public transportation, taxis, rideshare services, and rental cars may be reimbursed when necessary for business travel.

Rental cars should normally be economy or compact class unless a larger vehicle is required for business reasons.

6. Expense Reporting

Travel expenses should be submitted through the expense system within 10 business days after returning from a trip.

Each expense report should include the business purpose, travel dates, and required receipts.
